Mock Trials

A mock trial differs from a moot in that it is a mock jury-trial, with jury and witnesses, not an argument on law. The witnesses may dress themselves up and court and counsel wear robes if possible. The audience may consist of non-lawyers. Since the trial is unrehearsed; it requires a high standard of forensic ability on the part of the student "counsel". The actual trial is a valuable experience for budding advocates. The legal participants should have attended real trials to know how the trials are conducted in court. There should not be more than 5 or 6 witnesses. There are 3 games in mock trial namely Alibi, False Evidence and Third Degree. For the game of Alibi, the gathering divides into groups of four with two prosecuting counsel and two defendants. The defendants commit a crime at a time and place and set up an alibi. They are cross-examined by the prosecuting counsel, whose aim is to break down the alibi by questioning and setting contradictory answers.

In False Evidence, a defendant has assumed a false name and occupation and all defendants submit a summary of their life. The jury has to cross examine defendants and witnesses to find out who has given false evidence and gives the verdict.

In 'Third Degree', there are only two players. The defendant has to fill in details under questioning and based on that is cross examined to bring out the weak points in defence. In mock trials, the counsel should make themselves acquainted with the procedure and also the rules of evidence, so as to ask leading question.

Questions:

- (a) How do mock trials differ from moots?
- (b) Who should be part of trials? How should counsel equip themselves?
- (c) Explain the game of Alibi.
